

THE PALOUSE: A VIEW FROM ABOVE

Surrounding you are the rolling hills that French-Canadian explorers and fur traders called the grassland country: La Palouse. The tall bunchgrass that once dominated the landscape around Steptoe Butte in the early 1800s is still tall grass. Today the Palouse Hills are recognized as Washington's most fertile agricultural region. In the Palouse wheat is king.

Spend a few moments atop Steptoe Butte and take in the vastness of the Palouse. From here you look out upon a sea of wind-blown hills dotted with ancient buttes and surrounded by distant mountains. It is a unique and fertile landscape that is rich in character and history. It is a landscape that has always defined the lives of the people who live here.
